PROJECT TITLE

BEYOND LEGALITY: ETHICAL SENSIBILITY AND VALUES IN CIVIL SERVICE

Kakani Pujitha

AP23110011433

Submitted to

Dr P. Arun

ETHICS, VALUE AND APTITUDE FOR CIVIL SERVICE

CSE

SRM UNIVERSITY AP

(April 2026)

1. INTRODUCTION

Public administration is not only about enforcing rules, but also about serving people in a fair and humane manner. While laws provide structure and clarity, real-life situations often present complexities that require ethical judgment. A civil servant must therefore go beyond legality and act with sensitivity, integrity, and compassion.

A common relatable scenario is that of a government officer responsible for distributing welfare benefits, such as pensions or subsidized food, under public schemes. Suppose an elderly woman approaches the office seeking her pension, but her application is rejected due to a minor documentation error-perhaps a mismatch in spelling of her name or a missing certificate. Legally, the officer is justified in denying the benefit until all documents are perfectly in order. However, the moral problem arises since the woman is poor, helpless, and dependent on the retirement income to sustain herself. Strict adherence to rules would deny her immediate relief, while a more empathetic approach may involve helping her resolve the issue or providing temporary assistance.

The character traits include, for example, empathy, kindness, fairness, humility, honesty, and tenacity.

2. STAKEHOLDER'S ANALYSIS AND ETHICAL REASONING

2.1 Identification of Stakeholders

This situation includes several stakeholders:

The elderly woman, Depends on who the pension to her basic needs and dignity.

The government, which establishes rules to ensure transparency and prevent abuse.

Other beneficiaries, which are fair and equal treatment under the scheme.

The civil servant, which should be balanced. Rule enforcement with ethical responsibility.

Each stakeholder represents a valid concern, to produce the decision More significant than a simple rule-based action.

2.2 Competing Values

But Stake the Dilemma Reflects a tension Among the central management and ethical values are Rule compliance Versus Sympathy: Rules Ensure justice, but compassion requires sensitivity. Individual hardship.

Uniformity Versus equity: Treating everyone the same may not always be factual. Equality is needed for consideration of circumstances.

Efficiency Versus Sympathy: Quick rejection of incomplete applications Effective but requires empathy. Additional effort.

Authority Versus humility: Exercising power Must be balanced with respect and understanding.

A rigid approach may manifest refined on paper, but the result can be. Injustice in practice, especially for vulnerable individuals.

2.3 Ethical Course of Action

If I were the civil servant in this situation, I just desire to declare no. The application. Instead, I will have a supportive and solution- oriented approach while staying inside. The legal framework. This will include:

1. To guide the applicant About how to correct the documentation error.
2. Providing assistance, such as helping or giving directions to fill in forms the appropriate office.
3. Allows reasonable flexibility, where permitted, for minor discrepancies.
4. Ensure authenticity while avoiding misuse unnecessary rigidity.

This approach Reflects integrity, which the rules Not violated, but thoughtfully implemented. It shows empathy and compassion by understanding the applicant' s situation. Show kindness and humility. Respectful interaction, At the same timeframe as ensuring that justice is maintained. The process Remains transparent and consistent.

Tolerance and forgiveness are vital to recognize. That errors Often occurs in documents lack of awareness rather than with intent to deceive. Fortitude This is how it must be taken humane decisions, especially in systems that can prioritize. Rigid compliance over ethical judgment.

By helping the individual Without compromise the system, Civil servant maintains both administrative efficiency and human dignity.

3. ROLE OF ETHICAL SENSIBILITY IN CIVIL SERVICE

This case shows that law and procedures only cannot lead to a rightful decision. Ethical sensibility can enable public servants to interpret law and regulations so that the purpose of public service will be attained. Rigid and literal adherence of rules may sometimes lead to exclusion of the very people who require support from public services. Conversely, ethical sensible behavior can foster inclusiveness, fairness and public trust. Law and rules must be perceived and responded by the public as legitimate to the extent that their rights and dignity are respected.

Ethical sensible actions may enable public servants to:

- Show empathy and compassion (especially towards the deprived segments of society).
- Possess integrity and probity in public actions.
- Apply fairness and discretion (treating equals equally and unequal's unequally) in every action.
- Be kind and compassionate towards public.
- Exhibit humility.
- Show fortitude and strength in the pursuit of what is ethically correct.

Such traits change the character of public administration from a mere law and rules-based institution to an institution that cares for the people.

4. CONCLUSION

Service in the civil service is not merely about enforcing laws and rules but about maintaining and delivering justice in its true sense. Whereas laws give the means, moral conscience dictates the end and meaning of it.

The distribution of welfare described above has brought into focus the idea that even simple administrative decisions involve ethical concerns. A civil servant, operating only based on rules, can leave a needy person stranded while one operating on principles ensures that the administration is humane and inclusive.

Hence it is established that adherence to laws is not enough. There must be a strong sense of ethics and commitment to human values, such as compassion, empathy, honesty, fairness, kindness, humbleness, forgiveness, tolerance, patience, strength etc. for delivering the public service efficiently and justly.